ACQUISITION OF THE LAND & FIRST SETTLERS

Previous to 1635, the only white settlers in Connecticut were the Dutch from New Amsterdam who maintained a trading post (House of Good Hope) at the site of present Hartford. In 1635 emigrants from the vicinity of Boston settled on the Connecticut River at Wethersfield, Windsor and Hartford. After the Indian War of 1637, those who pursued the fleeing Pequots toward the west saw for the first time the lands of Long Island Sound west of the mouth of the Connecticut.

In 1638, a colony from Boston established headquarters on New Haven Bay. One of the New Haven companies went further west and settled Milford in 1639. For a long time the rest of the state was a wilderness. The enemies were the Indians, the wolves, bears and snakes and the French, the Dutch, and the devil.

The English settlers were careful to purchase and obtain what they considered as legal deeds from the roving Indians who had no permanent settlements. In some cases the same land had to be bought from several chiefs who demanded payment, and in most cases they reserved hunting and fishing rights. The Indians had no conception of private property. Judging the Colonists by themselves they supposed the settlers would cultivate a little land and support themselves by trading, fishing and hunting. The Indian was slowly disposed and quietly disappeared to the west. Had they known what was in store for them, they would have paid the wampum tributes of the Pequots and joined in the scalping parties of the Five Nations. The white settlers were so kind, and peaceful yet so destructive of the Indian resources, and in turn the new settlers did not know how soon the Indian would melt away before the glow and heat of Christian Civilization.

In 1675, the twelve families residing at Paugasett, were granted the privilege of a plantation which the Court named Derby and which became a separate town in 1675.

Oxford Parish (north farmers of Derby) completed their organization on June 30, 1741 after considerable opposition from the mother parish of Derby. The Town of Oxford was incorporated in 1798, out of the town of Derby.

Bethany Parish was formed out of Woodbridge Parish in 1762 and was incorporated as a Town in 1832. In 1839 Oxford gave up to Bethany the southern portion of its territory east of the Naugatuck River making Oxfords eastern boundary the Naugatuck River.
In 1844 Oxford gave up to the new Town of Naugatuck a tract of land lying west of the Naugatuck down to Spruce Creek.

In 1854 a small portion of Oxford was annexed to Seymour. Seymour was Incorporated out of Derby in 1850.

Beacon Falls was originally a part of Naugatuck, Seymour, Bethany and Oxford, which originally was a part of the Town of Derby, and in turn Derby was an outgrowth of Milford.

The earliest record of a settlement in the Oxford District appears to be that of Ensign Samuel Riggs, to whom a Derby Town meeting held January 14, 1678 granted liberty to take up 20 acres of land at or near Rock Rimmon, in what is now Seymour on the west side of the Naugatuck River. During that year, Major Ebenezer Johnson, Jeremiah Johnson and a few others also purchased small tracts of land at Rock Rimmon, near what is now called Pinesbridge.

The white settlers had no trouble with the Indians. They were known as the Paugasucks or Paugasetts, a large tribe, occupying considerable property on both sides of the Housatonic River, extending from Oyster River, which separates Orange from Milford all the way to Fairfield. On the west side of the Housatonic River, the Paugasucks claimed all the Territory now comprised in the Towns of Stratford, Bridgeport, Trumbull, Huntington and Monroe. On the east side of the Housatonic they claimed as far north as Beacon Hill Brook, which overlapped the hunting grounds of the Tunxis as the Indians of Farmington were known. Beacon Hill Brook later became the boundary between Waterbury and Derby and later Naugatuck and Beacon Falls.

One of the chief seats of the Paugasucks was at the Great Neck between the Housatonic and the Naugatuck Rivers in the vicinity of what later became known as "Baldwin's Corners". There was a large open field at this place, frequently referred to as "Indian Field". The proprietorship of the land around Derby seems to have been divided between the Pootatucks and the Paugasucks, the land of the Pootatucks extending on the west and south of the Housatonic and those of the Paugasucks east and north of that River. From 1665 onward, the Paugasucks sold land, piece by piece to the Derby people until the town bounds reached Waterbury and Woodbury on the north sometimes prior to 1680.

The Naugatuck River was, at one time, called the Paugasuck.

The Town of Beacon Falls was so named from Beacon Hill, and from which a small but beautiful water fall descended. When the town was named there was considerable desire to call the new district Home after the Home Woolen Mill.

Beacon Falls is one of the smallest towns in the New Haven County and next to Ansonia is the youngest. It lies on both sides of the Naugatuck River, south of Beacon Hill Brook, and from that locality the name was derived. Bounding it are the towns from which it was formed, in 1871, namely: Naugatuck on the north, Bethany on the east, and southeast, Seymour on the south and Oxford on the west. The greater part of the surface is mountainous, but along the brooks are some pleasantly located and fertile lands. On the east side is Hockanum Brook, flowing south into Lebanon Brook, a mile east of the point where the latter empties into the Naugatuck River, in the southeastern part of the town. On the opposite side of the river are Sherman’s Brook, in the northwest, and Hemp Swamp Brook in the southwestern part of the town.

The principal elevations on the west side are Rimmon Hill, in the southwest, and Toby’s mountain in the northwest, one of whose spurs is High Rock. This approximates 500 feet in height. Opposite Rimmon Hill and separated from it by the river is a bold, craggy and almost cone-shaped mound, more than 400 feet high, called Rimmon Rock. The name of the hill and the rock may have been derived from the fact that these bore, in the olden times, relative to the country beyond, a resemblance to the scriptural Rimmon. The plain beyond their northern bases was early called Lopus or Loper’s, but for what reason has not been clearly determined. The western and northern boundaries of this plain are the rocks of Toby’s mountain, so called from once having been the property of the Indian named Toby or Tobie, who for twelve years was a slave in the family of the Captain Ebenezer Johnson, one of Derby’s prominent men and the principal land holder in this town. He secured him in New London in 1676, when the Indian was a boy, and freed him in 1688. In 1693, through the influence of Major Johnson and for the consideration of 10 pounds and a barrel of cider, the Paugasuck Indians, who were the owners of this region sold to Toby a large tract of land, mostly mountainous, lying in the northwestern part of the town. This was legally confirmed to him in 1713. Here he lived until his death in 1734, when by the terms of his will, the land became the property of white men: Timothy Wooster, Peter Johnson, Ebenezer Johnson and Timothy Johnson, all but the first being sons of Colonel Johnson, his former master.
It appears singular that another Indian slave of Colonel Johnson should be connected with a land purchase in Beacon Falls, but such is the fact. One of his maid-servants was a young squaw Sarah, who was desired by an Indian for his wife, and she was sold to him in 1709. This dusky lover was named Chetrenasut, and he secured his bride for a consideration of 3 pounds, ten shilling of money and that tract of land "lying in a place called Nayumps, bounded northerly with Beacon Hill river, easterly with Milford, westerly with the Naugatuck River, and southerly with Lebanon river. This region was afterwards called "Nyumps" and was the northwestern part of Bethany, set off to Beacon Falls when the town was formed. It includes the main part of the town, and on which are now its most costly improvements.

South of Toby's land and the Nyumph purchase, earlier purchase had been made by Captain Ebenezer Johnson, in 1678, the same being in three small parcels, at or near Rock Rimmon, running up to Lebanon Brook. On the west side of the river, south of Toby's land and running down to lands in the present town of Seymour, purchased by David Wooster, in 1692. Major Ebenezer Johnson and Ensign Samuel Riggs purchased Indian lands in 1700, and eight years later they divided their interests. Ensign Riggs took the land on the west side of the Naugatuck, lying south of the brook at Pinesbridge, and Major Johnson took the lands north of the brook and those on the east side of the river. These lands at Pinesbridge Colonel Johnson divided between his sons, Charles and Timothy, in 1721 speaking of the same as "my farm at Rimmon". Before this time, in December, 1708, Ensign Samuel Riggs, of Derby, had given to his son, Ebenezer Riggs, 200 acres of the choicest lands "with houses and all appurtenances thereunto pertaining." On these lands Ebenezer Riggs settled soon after, but died in 1712, when but little more than thirty years of age.

It is supposed that some of the children of Colonel Ebenezer Johnson settled on their father's land soon after the settlement of Ebenezer Riggs, and that they lived west and southwest of Rock Rimmon. At a latter day Timothy Johnson, who was married to Abigail Brewster, in 1725, settled on the Naugatuck a short distance below Pines Bridge. In the same locality lived their son, Alexander, who was born in 1730 and died in 1817, aged 87 years. This Captain Alexander Johnson had a son Elijah, who occupied the homestead until his death, in 1847, at the age of 75. Sharpe, in his "History of Seymour", states that Timothy Johnson was at first much annoyed "by wild animals, especially bears, which came from Rock Rimmon and destroyed his crops’’. This locality, and in fact other parts of town, particularly Nyumph, were also much troubled by snakes, which came out from the crevices of the rocks and often crawled into the houses of the early settlers. The Johnsons were for many years numerous at Pines Bridge and around Rock Rimmon, and what is now Beacon Falls and Seymour. In the latter town Benajah Johnson last lived, until 1763, in the locality called Skokarat. A daughter, Zeviah, born in 1739, married Abiel Fairchild, who settled not quite a mile northwest from Pines Bridge. Fairchild was reputed a most excellent man, and was greatly esteemed by his neighbors.

Nearer Pinesbridge, on the Lopus Plains, the first settlers were Zadoc Sanford and Hezekiah Clark. The latter was the ancestor of Sheldon Clark, the benefactor of Yale College, and who left also a bequest for the maintenance of Pines Bridge.

In the Nyumph section, Samuel Wheeler probably put up the first house. His brothers, Moses, David, and James settled in the same locality, but Simeon lived nearer Rimmon. They were the sons of Captain James Wheeler, who lived on Turkey Hill, in Derby. Their descendants became numerous and prominent in Bethany and Oxford. In Nyumph also lived as a pioneer, David French and other members of that family, Moses Clark settling there later. In the course of years the population decreased, and in 1880 all the inhabitants numbered only 379.
INCORPORATION OF BEACON FALLS

Early in 1871, John Wolfe and others petitioned the Assembly for the creation of a new town, Beacon Falls, out of portions of Bethany, Naugatuck, Seymour and Oxford. On June 1, 1871, the Seymour Record reported that “last week representatives of Oxford together with the Selectman of Seymour appeared before the legislative committee and testified that in their judgement it would in no way be injurious to Oxford to lose that portion of it, which is asked for.” The Assembly approved this action June 30, 1871, and by this action
